The SDGs cannot be achieved by sticking with business as usual. Is the social and solidarity economy (SSE) the source for the innovations and values we need to achieve the aspirations of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development?

Join UN agencies, practitioners and academic experts at this two-day knowledge exchange of evidence-based analysis of how the social and solidarity economy is working towards achieving the SDGs at the local level. Topics range from gender, food and cities to the environment, impact measurement and how to scale up grassroots activities. Don't miss this opportunity to take a deep dive into the world of SSE and the SDGs, and to network across silos with people who share your passion.
